Boss Tweed Vamosed.

Boss Tweed, of New York, has escaped! He didn't break jail and run like a common thief. Oh, no! He managed the affair better. He persuaded Warden Dunham and airing. He had a headache. Close confinement disagreed with him. So Dunham and Hogan sympathized with the old rogue and procured a carriage and took him out riding. Then, after an airing, the Boss wanted to dine, and Dunham and dined together at the "Boulevard,"a fashionable restaurant. After dining, the Boss felt elegant and wanted to call on his wife and daughter, see his wife and daughter and they debt. all went to the residence of Mr. Douglass, the Boss' son-in-law, on no sympathy with the loud-mouthed Madison avenue.

law and son, in the down-stairs because of its unwillingness to pay apartment, the Boss wanted to go these bonds. Such refusal is not up-stairs to see the ladies. Here's repudiation. Equitably the State is where Dunham and Hogan missed not bound to pay these bonds. The it. They didn't want to go up-stairs. issuance of them was an arrant It's probable that Mr. Douglas kept swindle; and though the people did his wines down-stairs, and these jailers being thirsty souls staid by the whiskey. By-and-by, they thought it was time to get back to jail, and them were the same persons to whom as the Boss did not come back, they sent his son to call him. That duti- hold the major part of them and the ful gentleman did his errand dutifully, but he soon rushed back into the pay them now is for it to give to room where the officers were, filled with consternation, and in an unearthly whisper shreiked the startling words: "Father isn't there." Then the officers turned pale, and the son and son-in-law tore around and jerk ed the hair out of their own heads and declared that they were ruined.

The intelligence of the old thief's escape soon got back to jail, and Inspector Thorne started out all the police to hunt for the fugitive, and Sheriff Connor offered $10,000 reward for his capture, and Dunham and Hogan made statements of how it was, and amongst them they soon searched every place in New York and within twenty miles of it, where Boss Tweed wasn't and they didn't find him. He had either skeedaddled or hid. His trial in the six million suit was to begin on Monday and he didn't want to attend. It is too irksome. He couldn't stand the excitement. It made his headache. He was tired of confinement. too, and didn't want any more of it So he didn't get found.

What a farce-a bagatelle-this out. He has enjoyed more liberty, more comforts, more luxuries than thousands of honorable men who are comfortably well off. Because he is a big thief, because he stole by wholesale, he was treated like a king. Who ever heard of a poor wretch that stole to supply his necessities, or to keep the family he loved from suffering, being taken out of jail for an airing? Why should this more criminal thief be made an exception. If justice is done, those who have had charge of Tweed should be made to suffer the penalty of his crime.

The Old Bond Swindle.

It is well known that we advocated the settlement of the old railroad Jailor Hogan to take him out for an bonds by the sale of the 500,000 acres of internal improvement lands, and that we have always held the opinion that the State will ultimately pay those bonds. Our policy has been to settle with the bond-holders on the best terms that could be made; not because the debt was Hogan wanted to line, and they all justly due, but because the bonds bear witness on their face that the that isn't the name of the jail, but of faith of the State is pledged for their redemption, and one unacquainted with their history, must naturally conclude from such testimony that and Denham and Hogan wanted to the State does repudiate an hones

For the State to these swindlers the money for which they perpetrated the wrong!

It would be well for those who are howling repudiation to remember that there are two sides to this question, a side of policy and a side of justice. While policy dictates that the bonds should be redeemed and cancelled at the least possible cost, justice declares that the bondholders should be made to surrender what they obtained by fraud, and punished for what constitutes morally a case of treason against the

Hay Creek Sociable.

Editor Grange Advance:

One of the most sociable parties ever witnessed in the town of Hay Creek was held at the residence of Mr. Archibald Rose on the evening of Dec. 1st, 1875, in which many neighbors and the principal officers of Hay Creek Grange participated, the objects to be accom plished embracing two features.

First, Mr. Daniel Sanders and family being about to leave Minnnesota for their new home in Texas, they were impelled by generous motives to something more substantial than a mere good-bye to their neighbors, brothers and sisters of the grange, by providing, with the assistance of Mrs. Rose, a substantial oyster supper and other good things such as the sisters of the Order have secured for themselves a reputation for providing. This part of the programme passed off merrily, though the many appetites lost failed to relieve the

"Presented to Daniel Sanders by Hay Creek Grange, No. 126, P. of H., Dec. 1st, 1875, Goodhue County, Minnesota.'

The presentation was made by P. T. Erber, Master, with appropriate re marks. He addressed Bro. Sanders as confess that we are far from being an old settler, a kind neighbor, and a an enthusiastic believer in that big true member of the grange, not forgetting that the major portion of his family have been efficient and worthy officers in the same, and said:

"I present to you this cane in behalf of Hay Creek grange, with their best to anybody else, and its ultimate re- wishes for your future happiness and sult may be more harm than benefit prosperity. Please accept it as a pledge to the country generally. But it of our respect and esteem for yourself cannot be prevented. It has gone and family. We hope it may be a suptoo far for that. And now, it is the port to you in your declining years, and that you may take it with you wherever
